Microsoft WindowsQ: How to get list of all routes that are being used by an application We have an application running on a number of production systems, and each of those systems is often (several times every day) bringing up a replication of the application. There are a couple of things that can cause the system to fail, the two main failures currently are: A script fails and the app needs to be brought down manually. Our admin services has an entry for this in their system logs. Our core network goes down, the app is brought down and the app is then brought back up. However, when this happens, the app cannot be brought back up because it's using different set of routes. We'd like to have something like a list of routes that we're currently using, so we can quickly identify the ones that need to be changed. But I don't see an easy way of getting this information. Anyone got any ideas? A: Have you tried using nmap or wireshark? They will give you a nice list of hosts/services/protocols/routing/etc. Here's what I would think: start wireshark/nmap and capture for a short period of time (like 5-10 minutes), capturing the traffic to the router. You can turn off all of the routing info to make it easier on your analysis. analyze the captured traffic looking for DNS, etc try to correlate this traffic to application specific traffic Here are a few resources that may be helpful: Q: jquery ajax issue in IE 8 I am trying to do a simple login form in which the form data is send by Ajax but it is not working in IE 8. ClassCastException on calling myService.myFunction() in Gson I have a class which looks like this class MyClass { String value1; String value2; MyClass(String a, String b) { value1 = a; value2 = b; } } I need to serialize an object of this class to JSON. I try to use the following gson code MyClass obj = new MyClass("aaaa", "bbbb"); Gson gson = new Gson(); System.out.println(gson.toJson(obj)); when run, it gives the following error java.lang.ClassCastException: com.my.package.MyClass cannot be cast to com.my.package.MyClass which makes no sense to me. Am I missing something? A: In the toJson method of Gson the class parameter is internally serialized as a string. Therefore, if you send a MyClass object instead of an instance of the class, the output string will simply be the name of the class. The ClassCastException is thrown when an object
