Comparison of the effects of pacing under negative, low and high diastolic pressure on myocardial oxygen consumption, coronary blood flow and myocardial lactate extraction. This study aimed to assess the effects of the presence of different diastolic filling pressures ($p(d)$) on myocardial oxygen consumption (MVO_2), coronary blood flow (CBF), and myocardial lactate extraction (MLE). The pacing regimen consisted of a diastolic pressure of either 2.0, 5.0, 10.0 or 15.0 kPa (11.9, 27.0, 43.4 or 56.7 mmHg, respectively), over a range of heart rates between 50 and 150 bpm. Ten isolated, constantly perfused rabbit heart preparations underwent pacing at each diastolic pressure and heart rate. MVO_2 , CBF, arteriovenous oxygen difference, and lactate concentration were calculated and MLE was calculated for the first 10 beats of each pacing period. At low heart rates (50-90 bpm), MVO₂, CBF and lactate extraction varied slightly with p(d), but at high heart rates (100-150 bpm) CBF and lactate extraction were low and independent of p(d). These results suggest that (1) when the inotropic state is stable, the MVO₂-CBF relationship is very tight and therefore the variations in MVO₂ with p(d) are small; (2) the oxygen debt is never crossed at any heart rate; (3)
